WATER SUPPLY IN INDONESIA MARKET OPPORTUNITIES

INDONESIA GROWTH FALLS BELOW 6% AS RISKS TO ECONOMY INCREASE

Gross domestic product increased 5.81 percent in the three months ended June 30 from a year earlier, the Central Bureau of Statistics said in Jakarta today. That compares with a revised 6.03 percent pace for the first quarter and the median estimate of 5.9 percent in a Bloomberg Newssurvey of 19 economists.

Indonesia's GDP increased 2.61 percent last quarter from the previous three months, when it expanded a revised 1.42 percent. That compared with the 2.75 percent median estimate in a Bloomberg survey. The Statistics Department didn't say if there are revisions to growth beyond the first quarter. The economy grew 5.92 percent in the first half. UTILIZATION OF WATER TECHNOLOGY MUST EFFICIENT

Management of drinking water in Indonesia requires innovation of appropriate technology for a variety of natural conditions. Especially for areas that have limited the quality of raw water, such as swamps, small islands and coastal areas.

Some areas in Indonesia have limited raw water quality, among others, water with high turbidity, peat water, or brackish water / salt. That requires technological innovations in the processing of the raw-water treatment that would be effective and efficient, according to the ability of local communities.
